

Muslim 'holy war' on British soil?

NO THANKS!

Huge Asian presence in this country threatens to involve us in a religious quarrel that is none of our business

FOR YEARS, our paper, and the British National Party which it supports, have been warning people against the appalling consequences of making Britain a multi-racial country.

During the 1980s, our warnings have been amply justified by the series of terrifying race riots that have taken place in inner-city areas like Brixton, St. Pauls, Handsworth and Toxteth — these riots involving mainly West Indians.

Now a new and increasingly sinister dimension has appeared — this time involving members of the huge Asian community here. Religious bigotry and intolerance threaten to bring violence and murder to our country — and all in pursuit of quarrels that have nothing to do with Britain or the British people.

Salman Rushdie, the author, is one of the large numbers of Indians living and working in Britain. Recently he wrote a book, The Satanic Verses, which contained some passages which incensed the entire world of Islam, including the many Moslems residing in Britain.

Thousands of Moslems in Bradford, the largest Asian city in this country, staged a rally in the city centre. One of the leading local Asian citizens burnt a copy of the Rushdie book, while the crowd bayed for the author's blood.

This was then followed by threats by members of the Moslem faith against the shops of W.H. Smith & Son, where the book had been on display. Bradford police advised W.H. Smith to remove the book from its local branches because of the likelihood of attacks on premises and injury to staff. Smith's complied.

CONTRACT

Then the furore escalated. The Ayatollah Khomeini of Iran put out a contract on Rushdie and announced a reward of 3 million dollars for any Moslem who would bump the author off.

Needless to say, it is likely that there will be many only too anxious to oblige the Ayatollah.

With Rushdie living in Britain, and with vast numbers of Asian Moslems living here also, this makes our country a potential battleground in a religious war that has nothing to do with us.

It means that there are liable to be plenty of gun-toting Moslems wandering around looking for Rushdie. It means, eventually, the probability of bullets flying in Britain's streets — fired by zealous Moslem fanatics who imagine, correctly or incorrectly, that they have spotted the author of The Satanic Verses.

It means innocent British bystanders running the risk of getting caught in the line of fire, and possibly killed.

It is likely to mean increasing numbers of noisy and fanatical

THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN US AND THEM

ALL NATIONALISTS, but especially those active on the streets and in the housing estates and thus directly involved in promoting the message of our movement, should at all times be aware of the basic differences between this movement and the parties of the 'liberal-democratic' establishment.

The latter concern themselves with bribing and pandering to all that is cowardly, lazy and selfish in the masses. Their basic aim is just to grab the trappings and perks of political office for their leading lights and hangers-on, without regard for the true vital interests of the nation as a whole, still less with a view to guaranteeing the survival of the white race for all time, in conditions of pride, honour and independence.

The guiding principle of the party politicians involved in the grubby little political game of Westminster is short-term expediency — in finding the quickest and easiest route to office. Their method is to regale the electorate with promises — promises of ease and comfort, promises of more money and a higher material standard of living, promises all of which are to be fulfilled without the slightest risk or sacrifice by those who vote for them.

The voter is told that all he has to do is put his cross in the appropriate space on his ballot paper, and then simply trust in Maggie — or Neil, or Paddy — to do the rest for him, without his ever having so much as to raise his little finger thereafter. The one thing the slick 'liberal-democratic' operative shuns — like the Devil shuns holy water — is spelling out hard, unpleasant and controversial truths.

We nationalists, on the other hand, are not here to make promises to the British people; we are here to make DEMANDS on them.

There are in fact only two conditions that we absolutely undertake to guarantee to the man in the street in the Britain which we will one day bring about. The average citizen will get two unquestionable benefits from our rule: first, he will get work, within the framework of national economic self-sufficiency and full employment which we shall set up; secondly, he will live under a state in which there will be law and order.

For the rest, we demand of this citizen that he will subordinate his own private wishes and ambitions to the collective good of the nation as a whole, and in the first place to its basic survival.

To this end, it is necessary that we should start as we mean to carry on. The one thing we owe to the mass of the British people is to level with them from the word Go, to tell them the truth about their present critical situation, and about the nature of our movement and what it considers necessary if Britain is to be saved from the myriads of vicious enemies assailing her both from within and without.

It is for us, in other words, to show standards of courage, honour and truthfulness which are virtually absent from the Tory, Labour, SLD and SDP parties.

Our nation cannot be saved without a very stiff fight, which will require a very high degree of bravery, discipline and sacrifice from its whole population. We,

NO-ONE should be in any doubt about the true meaning of the latest explosion of militant Moslem fanaticism over the publication of Indian author Salman Rushdie's novel. It is not Rushdie himself who is the ultimate target of the Moslem attack; it is ourselves — Britain and the West.

Just to begin with, when Ayatollah Khomeini made his call for Rushdie's death he did not confine himself to ordering his Moslem followers throughout the world to murder only the author of The Satanic Verses; he extended this 'death sentence' to all those in Britain responsible for publishing and distributing the book, who, without exception in his eyes, are all equally 'guilty' of blaspheming Islam.

No sooner had Khomeini uttered his words than stone-throwing mobs, specifically chanting 'Death to Britain!', materialised outside the British Embassy in Teheran. Next, in a supreme gesture of contempt for Britain and the British people, the Ayatollah's London Envoy, Ahkunuzadeh Basti, summoned to the Foreign Office to be told that 'no-one has the right to incite people to violence on British soil or against British people,' stood on the steps of the Foreign Office building in Whitehall and, as bold as brass, personally repeated these very incitements!

Urging Moslems in Britain to 'do their duty,' Basti coolly proclaimed that Khomeini's order to kill had been taken 'after careful religious consideration,' and that 'every Moslem will know how to respond.'

One of the first to have responded was Sayed Abdul Quddus, described as a leader of 60,000 Moslems in Bradford. Endorsing Khomeini's 'death sentence' on Rushdie and his publishers, Quddus remarked: 'There are any number of our people who would be willing to carry out what to us would not be a crime but a justified act.' He went on to pledge that he would himself willingly carry out the Ayatollah's order to kill.

MORE THREATS

Meanwhile, a slightly more sophisticated Moslem spokesman, barrister Muhammed Aktar of the UK Action Group on Islamic Affairs, adopted a somewhat slicker and more subdued line. Denying that Moslems in Britain had themselves approached the Ayatollah with any specific request to issue his inflammatory statements against Rushdie, his British publishers and Britain itself, Aktar expressed the hope that 'his comments will put pressure on the publisher to withdraw the book' — whilst adding: 'We hope and pray that they will not lead to any violence.' Aktar acknowledged that many Moslems look up to Khomeini as 'their Pope.'

Iqbal Sacranie, the Islamic Committee's convenor, said of Khomeini's call: 'He was laying down Islamic law that blasphemy is punishable by death in an Islamic country... These laws do not hold in a demonstrations against Rushdie — and no doubt also against the British authorities, who are now protecting him — in the streets and squares of British towns and cities. We have seen one such demonstration in Bradford. Another recently took place in Stoke-on-Trent. There will undoubtedly be more.

And all this means that huge numbers of policemen — stretched to the limit in trying to cope with the growing crime wave — will have yet another problem on their hands, tying down manpower and further straining resources, all at the British taxpayer's expense, of course.

And it means one other thing. It shows that we now have, right in our non-Islamic country.' But one of his colleagues, Mughram Al-Ghamdi, attacked the law in Britain which only permits criminal proceedings for blasphemy against the Anglican faith. Al-Ghamdi looked forward to this law being changed so as to grant special protection to Islam as well.

DEMAND FROM PAKISTAN

Back in Pakistan, militant Moslem leader Moulana Kausar Niazi demanded that the British Government should ban The Satanic Verses, just as it did Spycatcher, in order to protect Moslems, whom he described as 'the second largest religious group in Britain,' from being offended.

THE REALITY OF THE RUSHDIE AFFAIR

What it seems the Moslem militants really want is to put themselves, and their community as a whole, in a position of special privilege in Britain. Plainly, if they can get the ban in this country, any criticism of their religious faith that they are seeking, this would not be restricted just to rebellious members of their own community, such as Rushdie himself, who was brought up as a Moslem; it would be a ban on the free speech of anyone at all in this country to whom Moslems took exception.

BASTI Backed up Ayatollah

What is more, they obviously think they can get what they want! Who can blame them? They have in the past!

For over 40 years, they have seen the British people put up with politicians who have promoted vast Afro-Asian immigration into British territory, including that of millions of Moslems. Those same politicians have encouraged the immigrants to set up shop and make themselves at home over ever greater areas of Britain. They have given them hand-outs. They have patronised and fawned upon them. They have handed them wealth, status and power, and protected them with 'race relations' acts designed to persecute native Britons for the benefit of aliens. Small wonder that the Moslems should now believe they can get an extension of the law enshrining Islam as an object of reverence before which the British serfs can be made to grovel.

FEEBLE RESPONSE

Such an idea can only have been reinforced in the minds of the Moslems by the characteristic feebleness of the British Government in the face of the Rushdie agitation. No serious move has been taken up to now to deport from this country agitators for murder like Quddus — the Home Office has done no more than wring its hands and protest that Quddus can't be sent home to Pakistan, his land of origin, because 'he is a British citizen.' Indeed it seems unlikely that he will even be prosecuted, despite the fact that his words amount to incitement to murder.

QUDDUS Made incitement to murder but not arrested

Margaret Thatcher got herself elected to office as Premier back in 1979 by suggesting that she would stop Britain being swamped by alien forces. But in fact we are today being swamped as never before — as is shown by this Moslem grab for power in what is supposed to be our country.

It is time for British people to stop wringing their hands and wailing helplessly about what is happening, as if they were powerless to stop it, and start using their numbers and their votes to fight back!

THE GREAT 'GUARDIAN ANGELS' SPOOF

IN A PHONY-LOOKING piece of hype, the mass media have recently been holding forth the so-called 'Guardian Angels' vigilante group from New York as some sort of cure for violent crime in Britain's inner cities, especially on the London Tube. Some of the tabloids, in particular, have been working up quite a bit of razzamatazz around Mr. Curtis Sliwa, the citizen of New York who originally formed the group in that city and who has recently been recruiting in Britain.

On top of this, it was recently reported in one paper that cosmopolitan impresario and film director Mr. Michael Winner was offering to back the 'Angels' financially.

If asked what we think about all this, we could only comment that we regard it as another spoof on the great British public. The 'Guardian Angels' have certainly not stopped mugging, drug-pushing or violent crime in New York and are never likely to succeed in doing so. New York is as much a nightmare jungle as it has ever been, and is likely to remain so, 'Angels' or no 'Angels'.

We think that the promotion of the 'Guardian Angels' is just an offer by the mass media of yet one more snare and delusion to the people of our inner cities,

CHIEF SPOOFER Curtis Sliwa on the London Tube

never-endingly victimised as they are by violent criminals, in order to distract their attention from the only true solutions to the problem. These solutions are political, and will be achieved only when a movement such as the British National Party has achieved power in this country and can set about restoring Britain's traditional national community.

It is, at least in part, to distract the minds of ordinary British people away from any such ideas that the masters of the mass media are pushing such nonsense as the 'Guardian Angels'.

'The more the merrier, was the liberal refrain, it being taken for granted somehow that anybody with a black or brown face could be guaranteed to be a liberal progressive at heart. evidently setting itself up as a censor of what books and other literature may be printed and sold in Britain, what views may be aired and what views may not be aired.

The Rushdie book is clearly only the start. If the Moslems feel that they can frighten and intimidate people over this issue, they are pretty certain to extend the practice further, and seek to frighten and intimidate people over any propagation of opinions they dislike or find offensive.

REAPING THE HARVEST

All this is the harvest which we are now reaping for the multi-racial society — imposed upon us by our political leaders without our consent, and more lately enforced by draconian laws and persecution against politicians, journalists and public servants who have not complied 100 per-cent with that policy.

There is only one way in which the violence and civil war now threatening this country as a consequence of the multi-racial society can be averted: that multi-racial society must be ended; further immigration of West Indians, Asians and other people of cultures incompatible with our own must be halted completely; and a massed repatriation programme for those already here must begin.

Some may think this an extreme response to the problem, a response that would involve too much difficulty, too much unpleasantness and too much upheaval.

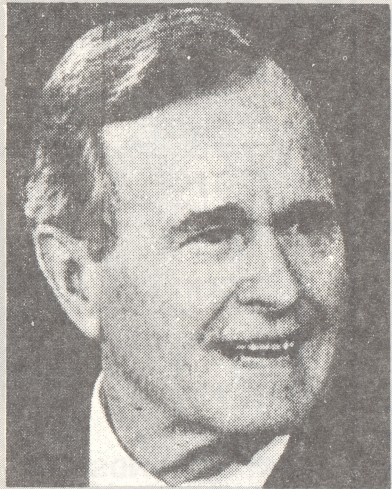

But it is nothing compared with the difficulty, the unpleasantness and the upheaval that are going to be our lot if we just let things drift on as they are — with race riots convulsing our inner cities one moment and religious warfare running rife in our land the next.

There has got to be an alternative way for this country. Let us all dedicate ourselves to work for and achieve that alternative — before it is too late!

When the two leading parties compete for the ethnic minority vote, it means that the ethnic minorities are in control!

A GREAT VICTORY was won for the cause of white people all over the world by Mr. David Duke, who won a seat in the legislature of the state of Louisiana, USA, last month.

But what was particularly interesting about Mr. Duke's triumph is that it was achieved despite the personal

BUSH
Pleaded with voters not to support Duke intervention of both President Bush and ex-President Reagan on the side of Duke's opponent. Both Bush and Reagan pleaded with the electorate of the New Orleans suburb of Metairie not to vote for Duke, as he had previously been a high-ranking official of the Ku Klux Klan and stood on a firm platform of white 'racism'.

WOOLING THE ETHNICS

The intervention of the President and ex-President was explained by the press as being occasioned by the policy of the Republican Party, in whose name Duke stood, of wooing the coloured voters of America. That Duke could win as a Republican would be an event that would badly affect this campaign of making the party more popular with the country's Blacks and other ethnic minorities.

Traditionally, the Democratic Party has been the party in America able to garner most of the votes of these sections of the population. As the size of the ethnic minority groups increases, this gives a big electoral advantage to the party able to muster their support. The Republicans, therefore, have been desperate to make inroads into the ethnic minority vote by kow-towing more and more to ethnic minority interests.

ALSO HAPPENING IN BRITAIN

And the ironic thing is that this is exactly what is happening in Britain also. The Tories, traditionally the party with the smallest support among the ethnic minorities, has in recent years been bending over backwards to appease those minorities in order to make good this disadvantage.

And of course, as this happens, the other parties, who in the past have commanded the larger slice of the ethnic vote, will offer the ethnics even more 'goodies' and prostrate themselves even more in the service of ethnic minority interests in order to fend off the competition!

ETHNICS DECIDE WHO WINS

What all this means is simply that, in a country where the two leading parties are fairly evenly balanced with regard to their support among the indigenous sections of the electorate, the one that succeeds best in courting the ethnic minority vote is the one most likely to win.

Both Britain and the United States are just such countries.

The result of this situation is that the ethnic minorities are in a position of virtual CONTROL over the political process: they can, in effect, determine which party is in power.

And this is the appalling state of affairs that we have now reached in both this country and America.

PRODUCT OF THE SYSTEM

The state of affairs will of course continue, and get even worse, as long as we are ruled by the present party system, under which the native electorate is neatly divided, whether it be into two parties or more than two. Only when the native electorate is overwhelmingly united — in support of a single party which can be seen to represent the interests of ALL sections of the native population, will the power of the ethnic minorities be broken.

That is the brutal truth that confronts the people of Britain and America. They had better wake up to this truth soon — and do something about it!

THE LID was lifted on a cesspit of perversion in modern-day Britain when two child sex abuse cases were brought to light in January.

Four evil degenerates were sentenced to a total of 34 years' imprisonment for their part in the corruption of children, some as young as nine or ten, into a homosexual child sex ring. The four were convicted of offences described by Judge Henry Pownall as "unspeakable, horrifying and appalling," up to and including acts of buggery that amounted practically to homosexual rape on the young victims.

The convicted perverts were said to be part of a nationwide paedophile gang which trapped no less than 150 boys. Some of the latter became so corrupted that they ended up believing that the sickening acts into which they had been seduced were quite normal. They were then sent out to corrupt others, and many became rent boys in London's West End, making large sums of money for the puppet-masters behind the sex ring.

Others were emotionally scarred for life. One youngster finished up in Broadmoor Secure Hospital after a complete mental breakdown.

TIP OF THE ICEBERG

Horribly, the four perverts behind the ring were said to be no more than the tip of an iceberg, reaching into quite senior areas of the establishment. At least one vicar was said to have been quizzed by police in the course of their enquiries, and one of the convicted was wealthy barrister and former Foreign Office official Colin Peters. Peters recruited victims from schools for disturbed or sub-normal children, upon whom he practised his perversions before passing them on to his cronies in the ring for their own sexual gratification.

Det. Supt. John Lewis of Scotland Yard, who headed the police investigation of the ring, remarked: "These people are as organised and sophisticated as any other criminals and are involved in a permanent conspiracy which is renewed daily as they continue the hunt for new boys."

Supt. Lewis added: "Some are potential killers."

One man arrested was too frightened to tell the police about the rest of the ring, describing it as "more powerful than the Mafia."

While the trial of these creatures was taking place at the Old Bailey, a family of eight adults in Nottingham were jailed for sexually abusing their own child relatives. One of the convicted had committed acts of sexual intercourse against a daughter of six.

The investigation of this sex abuse case, the largest ever mounted in Britain, ended with 23 children, 18 of them from one family, being taken into care. "We have removed a whole generation," said Mrs. Judith Dawson, Nottinghamshire's child abuse consultant.

WHAT MUST BE DONE

One thing should be obvious right from the start. If we want to clean out the sewer of corruption of which these two cases were merely examples, and the full extent of which is only now starting to be revealed, we need to be prepared to take some measures which run completely contrary to current 'liberal' fashions.

For a start, we need to introduce much healthier ideas into the education of our young to prevent them going wrong, as did some of the youngsters in these cases. Equally certainly, we need to instil a much harder outlook into the courts and the legal system when it comes to administering penalties to such creatures as the ones involved, some of whom can only be described as suitable cases for extermination. At the very least, a certain surgical operation

We need a population programme that maintains and raises the biological standards of the British people, whilst should be made compulsory for such sub-humans.

To protect decent society, nothing less will do.

In addition, we need to restore the laws prohibiting acts of homosexuality, the repeal of which opened the floodgates to these kinds of perversions.

But above all, we need to understand reflect not just upon the state of morals in our country, bad as this is, but upon the actual quality of some of the human material that Britain has been producing in modern times.

Above and beyond the toughening up of the law, we need to take steps to ensure, as far as possible, that such elements never get to be born in the first culling out inferiors, misfits and degenerates, and depriving them of both the right and the opportunity to breed their kind.

Britain is becoming a sewer. The sewer needs cleaning out. It is time that the nation had leaders with the guts to take the steps necessary to bring this about.

YOUR LETTERS

Sir, — You have quoted Paul Johnson, writing in The Spectator, as stating that no newspaper dares to publish articles which discuss Britain's race problem frankly.

Is Mr. Johnson admitting he does not read British Nationalist and Spearhead, the only honest and fearless paper and magazine in Britain today?

Perhaps you should send him a copy — I would hate to think he is missing out on his education!
W.S. WOOTTON (Mrs.)
Kings Lynn, Norfolk

Sir, — Lord Hailsham was inaccurate in claiming that there was no public concern about immigration in 1958.

That year there were race riots in Nottingham and Nottingham Hill, and a strong resolution was submitted (and ignored) at the Tory Party conference.

A mystique was attached, in those days, to the term 'Commonwealth Citizen', and: "MacMillan was reluctant to impose restrictions on the traditional right of every Commonwealth citizen to come to Britain." (page 285 of the biography of Nigel Fisher). Now that we have established that citizens of Commonwealth countries have no right of entry into our country, our next priority should be to get legislation passed ending their right to vote here.

R.E. TANDY
Kings Lynn, Norfolk

Sir, — Whilst reading the article in British Nationalist about the deportation of Viraj Mendis, I became struck with one very obvious benefit of introducing a national identity card system.

Recently, a lot of noise was made about ID cards for football supporters — a policy which will do little to wipe out soccer violence. The Government, however, is totally opposed to identity cards in the wider sense, for the nation as a whole. Why?

If everyone in Britain had to hold a national ID card, illegal immigrants in particular would be faced with a dilemma when application for the same became necessary. If they were to apply, they would expose themselves; if they did not apply, and they were later caught without cards, they would likewise be exposed.

Perhaps this is one of the main reasons why the Government is against such a policy.

'SAINT' WINNIE GETS EXPOSED

Darling of the British media under investigation for complicity in violence, thuggery and murder

FOR QUITE SOME TIME NOW, imprisoned black South African communist and terrorist Nelson Mandela has been held up for public admiration in Britain and other western countries as some kind of noble saint and martyr.

As a leader of the marxist African National Congress (ANC), Mandela was convicted of planning to unleash a campaign of bombings and assassinations in South Africa some 26 years ago — as part of a programme of revolutionary violence designed to bring down white civilisation in South Africa. Indeed, at the time in question Mandela already had a formidable record of involvement in thuggery, directed primarily against Whites but also at any Blacks not in accord with his communist revolutionary ideas.

At his trial, internationally recognised as being scrupulously fair and objective, Mandela fully admitted the charges brought against him.

None of this has stopped local councils up and down Britain, mainly those dominated by the lunatic left, naming streets, housing estates, parks and public buildings after him. And just recently no less a person than the Prime Minister, Margaret Thatcher, has shown signs of wanting to jump on the Mandela bandwagon by calling for his release from imprisonment.

It is reported that Mrs. Thatcher intends, during her forthcoming official visit to South Africa, to demand the immediate and unconditional release of the veteran red terrorist. The Prime Minister, who came to office ten years ago promising to secure British interests against the threat of Soviet Communism and to oppose terrorism resolutely wherever it manifested itself, has found it expedient until recently to pose as a 'friend' of South Africa. She has sustained this posture by purporting to oppose international economic sanctions as a means of bringing South Africa's Whites and the society they have created to ruin.

But now Mrs. Thatcher is apparently making new calculations about the best way of winning votes in British elections. She is said to have been impressed with the number of young voters (of what race is not specified) who recently attended a rock concert as part of the Mandela birthday celebrations mounted by left-wing 'anti-apartheid' agitators in London. She is reported to have decided that the Tory Party should fall into line with the burgeoning Mandela industry in order to win a piece of this electoral action.

TARNISHED IMAGE

Unfortunately for Mrs. Thatcher and other Mandela fans, the recent antics of the jailed terrorist leader's wife Winnie, in the black township of Soweto just outside Johannesburg where she lives, have done little for the Mandela image. Winnie Mandela, whom the international media have tried to set up as second only to her husband in sainthood, has been behaving more and more erratically with the passage of time.

To begin with, she was allegedly caught with her fingers in the till a few years ago when she ordered the building in Soweto of a luxurious mansion for herself out of ANC funds. Next, to the embarrassment of ANC

WINNIE MANDELA
Made a 'saint' by the British media, she is now being embarrassed by exposures of violence and corruption colleagues who wished to sell their cause to people in western countries under the phony guise of a 'human rights' movement, she urged her followers in South Africa to continue the bestial rubber-tyre 'necklace' executions of black opponents of the ANC — a method by which these victims were slowly burnt to death. Mrs. Mandela proclaimed: "Together, hand in hand, with our boxes of matches and our necklaces, we shall liberate this country."

Now it turns out that St. Winnie has been running a personal gang of thugs under the guise of a 'football team', styling itself 'Mandela United'. Apparently well-known and widely feared by Africans in Soweto, this gang has for long been beating up and torturing those who in any way displease Mrs. Mandela. It seems that the gang's latest exploit involved the abduction of a number of teenage youths to Mrs. Mandela's house, where one of them was beaten to death. It is even said that she herself was involved personally in dishing out the violence with a rhinoceros-hide whip.

South African police are currently assembling evidence. In a raid on the Mandela home they have removed blood-stained axes, knives and clothing.

Fearful that Nelson Mandela's 'martyr' image is being tarnished, ANC leaders, and their assorted marxist and liberal sympathisers, are now frantically trying to disown Winnie. They have even urged Mandela to divorce her.

NO RENUNCIATION OF VIOLENCE

But, as she herself has remarked of her husband, Mandela "will never renounce violence," and during the time when the rubber-tyre 'necklace' was strongly in vogue a year or two back he was certainly never heard to utter a word against its use — although that would have been sufficient on its own to stop such killings. In fact, Winnie's violent words and conduct are of course entirely consistent with the general line that Mandela has advocated throughout his career.

This cesspit of thuggery and violence which our media and politicians have been doing their damndest to conceal from our eyes is the true face of the Black African militancy which has afflicted South Africa for so many years, and which the established authorities of that country and their security forces have had to fight in order to preserve some semblance of peace and civilisation.

It is to the lasting shame of Britain that our media and political leaders — including even Mrs. Thatcher herself — have kept up the disgusting pretence that Mandela is some kind of martyr in the cause of 'human rights' and that he is a fit person to be released from confinement and given his freedom.

RALLY PLAN FOR ST. GEORGE'S DAY IN LEICESTER

LEICESTER will be the venue for this year's St. George's Day rally to be staged by the British National Party. The rally will take place on Saturday, April 22nd, in the afternoon and will be a fully public event, held in support of local organiser John Peacock, who is standing as a candidate in elections to the local council.

JOHN PEACOCK
Standing for council

Leicester was the venue of a very lively BNP rally in the Spring of 1987, when considerable left-wing opposition materialised. The nationalists completed the rally despite threats by the left that they would be 'smashed' if they tried. Leicester was also the scene of a riot by reds at a BNP rally in 1984.

The precise venue and detailed arrangements for the rally have not yet been finalised upon and will be announced in next month's issue. However, we want all units and activists to keep the date free and start making plans now to get to Leicester on the date stated.

In addition to the rally on the Saturday, there will also be a social event staged in celebration of St. George's Day on the evening of Friday, April 21st, also in Leicester and promoted by the Leicester Branch. All nationalists, from wherever in the country they may come, will be very welcome, and for those wishing to attend the social and stay for the rally the next day overnight accommodation can be arranged. Those interested please contact John Peacock at PO Box 148, Leicester LE3 2YD.

In addition, the BNP will also be fielding a candidate in elections to Essex County Council. The candidate will be standing in the Loughton area, and the local branch, Epping Forest (formerly Loughton) branch, will be staging a public rally in support of this candidate. The precise date has not yet been fixed but the event will be on an evening and will be sometime from middle to late April. As with the Leicester rally, we will give more details next month.

who set our party up as the potential seed-bed of a complete new national leadership to replace the rotten regime of the old gang of Westminster politicians, cannot demand these things as a duty unless we ourselves show, not only these qualities, but also standards of integrity, absolutely superior to those whom we oppose.

Our business is national survival — to which public truthfulness on matters of principle is essential.
